bptw partnership has been named in the Sunday Times Best 100 Small Companies to Work For 2008 for the fifth consecutive year. The practice is the only architects to be listed in the awards every year since it began in 2004.

The award is a great accolade which identifies best practice in businesses across the UK employing under 250 people, focussing on eight key areas including staff well being, personal development and giving something back.

bptw were also placed in the top 25 in the Giving Something Back category which recognises the contribution made to society by individual organisations.

Mark Bottomley, Partner said "This is an important achievement for bptw partnership, alongside our Investors in People and Best Companies accreditation, we strive to strike a good work/life balance and for staff to enjoy working here.

The award means a lot to us as it was judged from information gathered independently from staff about the practice, meaning it is a true reflection of the way we work."
